Dr. Antje Deckert is a criminology lecturer in the School of Social Sciences and Public Policy at AUT University in Auckland/New Zealand. Dr. Deckert's research programme Neo-colonial criminology: decolonising research methods and academic discourse explores the use of ‘silencing research methods’ and ‘othering discourse’ in contemporary criminology. It is underpinned by a theoretical framework that connects discourse and power, and views scholarly research as a distinct means of exercising social control. Besides criminological discourse, Deckert is interested in criminal narratives and identity; Indigenous peoples, epistemologies and research methodologies; and violent behaviour.
